
THE SELTZER-CHAN POND INLET FOUNDATION: 2013

POND INLET ARCHIVES

“The ship is here!”those words have been shouted out every summer for almost 100 years. The ship’s arrival causes excitement even today when much is brought into the community by air. This year’s cargo included cabinets that will enable better organization and preservation of maps and documents in the archives.

The Pond Inlet Archives are housed in the beautifully-situated Rebecca Idlout Library.

NAURAINNUK DAY CARE

Arts and crafts supplies and educational kits make an after-school program at the NaurainnuK day care fun and stimulating.

Melina and Brianna paint a mural of the Northern Lights with supplies provided by the Foundation.

STUDENT SUPPORT

A dozen achievement awards were distributed at the year-end ceremony at the Nasivvik High School in June. As well, four post-secondary students received funds to help with their college studies.

Debbie Nutarak, who studies Office Administration at Arctic College, holds her cheque from the Foundation.

Arctic College student James Simonie attended the Arctic Institute of North America Inuit Studies Conference at the Smithsonian Institute in the fall of 2012. Having contributed to a study of narwhals, James participated in a symposium discussing new approaches for linking science and indigenous knowledge.

WOMEN'S SEWING GROUP

From July to September women of all ages gathered on a daily basis to learn about seal skinning and how to make kamiit (the Inuit word for soft boots). The elders who acted as instructors were paid through a grant from the Foundation. The elders enjoyed teaching the traditional way of cleaning and preparing seal skins and the participants were happy to learn these techniques and spend time together. As group organizer Paumi Komangapik says, "Programs such as this surely make the community closer as well as preserving the culture of the Inuit."
